How much does electricity cost in NZ?

The average NZ household, comprised of a couple with two kids under the age of 18, pay between $2,000 to $3,000 a year in electricity. Take into account though, that your power bill might vary depending on several factors, including the number of occupants of the household, the type of appliances used, and more.

Should I get free electricity in New Zealand?

For this reason, we remind every New Zealander to be very cautious when a company offers you free appliances, joining credits, free hours of power or night power etc.; there is no such thing as free- someone's paying for it, and with the wrong deal, it's probably you.

Is there a two-tier pricing system in New Zealand?

As the media has reported, there is a two-tier pricing system operating in New Zealand- those who compare, switch and save, and those who stay loyal and overpay. We believe that's unfair, and a lack of government regulation or oversight means price rises can outpace inflation.

How much is a fixed daily charge in New Zealand?

The fixed daily charge also varies from low users to standard users. By law, low users pay between 60 to 120 cents + GST per day (this charge used to be 30 cents per day prior to April 2022). Standard users pay more (and how much that is, depends on where they live in New Zealand).
